Tapescript 11.3.1

When I was young, life was really hard in the past. We used to use candles at home as there was no electricity. A couple of decades ago, we couldn't use electrical appliances in our homes, so household chores weren't easy at all. People in villages used to wash their clothes in rivers because there was no running water.

When we were young, there were no mobile phones, so it was very difficult to contact our relatives who lived far away. Transportation was also a big problem; we used to go almost everywhere on foot. Many women had a sewing machine, and they used to make their children's clothes at home instead of buying them. Life was simple but also full of challenges. We had to work hard, but we learned to be patient and grateful for small things.

Philip: Hi, Dad! How are you? What were you doing when I called?

Dad: Hello, son. I'm fine. I was in the garden watering the flowers when the phone rang.

Philip: Oh, nice! And what about the others?

Dad: Well, your mom was in the kitchen. She was baking a cake. Your sister was in her room. She was listening to music. And your little brother was outside. He was riding his bike.

Philip: Sounds like everyone was busy! I just wanted to hear your voice.

Dad: That's kind of you, Philip. You know, we don't want to bother you too much while you're working on your projects.

Philip: Thanks, Dad. I have a lot to finish, but I feel better after talking to you.

Dad: Don't worry, son. We always think of you and pray for your success.
